

Join us for one of two workshops:

Achieving Dietary Diversity in Low-Income Countries

Thursday, June 19, 2014:
10am 1138 Meyer Hall

Or

Thursday, June 26, 2014:
9am 3001 PES

Come help frame the agenda on the intersection between agricultural production and human nutrition. In developing countries, agriculture is a vehicle for both poverty reduction and food production. As we increasingly see a nutrition transition where micronutrient malnutrition co-exists with diet-related chronic diseases, development agencies are re-examining the tools required to address the intersection of agriculture and nutrition.

UC Davis has a history of solving food challenges, both domestically and abroad. The World Food Center is seeking your input to position UC Davis as a thought-leader through white papers, international conferences, and development of new funding opportunities. The World Food Center will assist the Gates Foundation in developing the agenda for a Grand Challenge 2.0 meeting in October to direct future grant-making activities specifically in the intersection of agriculture and nutrition.

For more information, contact:
Edye Kuyper emkuyper@ucdavis.edu